SEE ALSO: How To Check and Recover Android Notification History Check your notifications with some twist! These notifications apps for Android certainly make a great difference to the way we are used to handle notifications. You should try this app to get the control on all app notifications and notification LEDs but it might be a slightly inconsistent ride ahead. There are also minor interface issues if you have a device with on-screen navigation buttons. Dynamic Notifications if you've used a newer Motorola smartphone or Microsoft's Lumia devices, you are already aware of what Dynamic Notifications brings. While there are tons of amazing features, most of them are locked in the free version. We would also love to see more customization options in the notification center. In case your device doesn't feature an LED flash, the app will use your screen's brightness to lighten things up. For instance, there's an ability to reply to WhatsApp messages from the notification center itself. If you have a device running an Android version previous to 5.0 Lollipop and you want the latest heads-up notifications feature, this is the app to get. Snowball/Snowball is a new notification app but it's very capable and our favorite notification app of the lot. Along with that, there are also options to change fonts, enable heads up notifications and more. The app shows you the clock, time, a lock button that can be used to open the apps you choose and notifications. The app also brings the BeBuzz/BerryBuzz feature we loved from older BlackBerry devices, which used to let users control a BlackBerry's notification LED. You should definitely give these apps a try if you have been bored with the same monotonous notifications. Light Flow Light Flow is a popular notification app, which lets you control the way every notification behaves. Moreover, the app lets you interact with notifications in the notification center. Having that, the app and all its complexity take some time before you get used to it. There's also an ability to set a notification's position, opacity, font size and more. Install: (Free) Compatibility: Varies with device. Metro Notifications Metro Notifications is a pretty extensive notification app, which lets you control notifications for each and every app. There's also an ability to stack notifications, which shows all the notifications from an app or else it only shows you the recent notifications. You can also set an app (apps like Gmail or Messaging) to show extra text in the popup. There are various themes including Lollipop styles, Ubuntu, light & dark or you can set it at random. You can press hold on a notification to see more details. Similar to Moto Display feature and Lumia's Glance, Dynamic Notifications lets you check your notifications without unlocking your smartphone. If you have a device running Android 5.0 Lollipop or up, you can check out notifications, as its customization features can be matched by stock Android. Thankfully, Android's open nature makes sure there are a lot of third party apps that serve as a notification center replacement. We tested out the various notification apps for Android and we found the best among them. In our testing, the app performed well and it was smooth all around but there were some sudden crashes at times. The irritating non-clearable notifications too can be put in the hidden tab. You can set what actions you can make on a heads-up notifications like dismiss on swipe, open as a floating window and more. Since the app is still new and gaining traction, we can expect the future updates to make Showball even better. Along with the chat heads implementation, Floatifications brings a ton of other features and customization options. 6. While there aren't many customization options, we still love what the app offers.
